Historical Context of the Cold War

The Cold War was a prolonged period of tension between the Soviet Union and the Western powers, primarily the United States and its NATO allies. This conflict was characterized by ideological, military, and political rivalries that shaped global relations from the end of World War II until the early 1990s. Europe was the central battleground for these competing ideologies, with Eastern Europe falling under Soviet influence and Western Europe aligning with capitalist democracies.

By the late 1980s, various factors contributed to the Cold War's end, including economic stagnation in the Soviet bloc, the rise of reform movements in Eastern Europe, and a series of diplomatic initiatives aimed at reducing tensions. The fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 symbolized the collapse of communist regimes across Eastern Europe, leading to significant political change and the eventual dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991.

Geopolitical Changes after the Cold War

The end of the Cold War led to substantial geopolitical changes in Europe. The most notable changes included the reunification of Germany, the independence of former Soviet republics, and the expansion of the European
